

IMPORTANT TO NOTE:

“Revoking your Election to pay federal income tax” works best ONLY for those who have no income tax withheld from what they earn.

Once you revoke your "Voluntary" payment of federal income tax, you cannot file the 1040 form ever again. You permanently remove yourself from the “taxpayer” club. The revocation of election is permanent!

When you are self-employed or have an employer who does not withhold taxes from your paycheck, revocation of election is appropriate.

HOWEVER, in the event that, at some point in your future, you have to take a “regular” job, you should do the following:

1. Request that your employer withhold no tax from your paychecks.

Instead of filing the “regular” W-4 form with your “employer”, write a letter to your employer stating “I will take full responsibility for any income taxes I lawfully owe”. Your employer can keep that letter on file in case the IRS makes any written demands for the W-4 form.

Some employers will deny such a request fearful of potential negative ramifications from the IRS. Lawfully though, the employer is only required to withhold income taxes from the employee’s paycheck when there is a written agreement, signed by both parties, stating the employee voluntarily elects to have income taxes withheld from his/her paychecks.

2. In the event that the employer insists on withholding income taxes from the employee’s pay for fear of repercussions from the IRS, and you want the job, request a paper paycheck, if at all possible.

On each paycheck you receive, ***Non-endorse the check as follows in blue ink and print legibly in all lower case letters using 2 or 3 lines depending on how big you print as space is limited:

demand is made for lawful money per 12USC411, by,
____your autograph here_____

Your autograph should match the autograph on your photo ID so the bank teller can tell it is your autograph. ***Blue ink is so you can tell the original signature from the copy.

***Be sure to make two copies of your “non-endorsed” check before you take the check to the bank. You need one copy to go along w/your tax return and one copy for your personal records. Also be sure that both the front and the back of the “non-endorsed” check show on the same side of the copy paper. Having each side of the “non-endorsed” check on two separate sheets of paper makes it difficult to prove that both sides are from the same paycheck. The reason the check is described as “non-endorsed” is that the standard endorsement which usually includes a signature and account number for deposit signify that you are endorsing and accepting the private credit system of the federal reserve banks. Keep all your copies of your “non-endorsed” check in a file in sequential order.

When it is time to fill out the 1040 “tax return” you simply put the amount of your “wages” (see www.losthorizons.com for a description of wages and a possible alternative to the demand for lawful money tax return filing) on line seven of the 1040 form. You then remove the amount of your “wages” on line twenty one of the 1040 form.

On the description line for line twenty one just print the words Demand for Lawful Money Reduction, or words to that effect, and put the amount of lawful money demanded in negative figures. The end result is that the amount you earn is added in on one line of the 1040 form, line seven, and removed on another line, line twenty one, of the 1040 form.

Also consider including a copy of Title 12 United States Code Section 411 as part of your 1040 “tax return” filing. You are dealing with criminals in the income tax filing process but if the tax form processors see the law it should inspire them to do the right thing and return the taxes you have had unlawfully taken out of the fruits of your labor for that year.

This process has been used successfully for years but recently the IRS has sent the infamous 3176C letter claiming a frivolous filing to some of the demand for lawful money filers. If you receive your tax return, which most do, wonderful. If you receive some communication from the IRS, be strong and do not be afraid, the law is on your side. There is a great deal of excellent information available for those who seek the truth and respond with questions and challenge the IRS’s authority. You are the law, not them. Demanding Lawful Money is an important part of returning our country to the law and our constitutional republic. We all need to do our part to return this nation to our republican heritage and at the same time rid ourselves of those that would steal, under color of law, the fruits of our labor.
